

Richard B. Freeman is Professor of Economics at Harvard University and Director of the Labor Studies Program at the NBER. He also serves as Faculty Director of the Labor and Worklife Program at the Harvard Law School. He is Professorial Research Fellow at the Centre for Economic Performance, London School of Economics.

His research interests include the growth and decline of unions; self-organizing non-unions in the labor market; restructuring European welfare states; international labor standards; transitional economies; Chinese labor markets; crime; employee involvement programs; income distribution and equity in the marketplace; the effects of immigration and trade on inequality; and the job market for scientists and engineers. He is currently directing (with Daniel Goroff) the NBER / Sloan Science Engineering Workforce Project.

His recent publications include What Workers Say: (Cornell), What Workers Want (Cornell 2nd edition), Can Labor Standards Improve Under Globalization (IIE) and America Works: The Exceptional Labor Market (Sage).